Kokrobitey Institute

Situated on a beautiful campus at the ocean's edge, the Kokrobitey Institute is committed to promoting Ghanaian culture. Since it was founded in 1992, Kokrobitey Institute has offered programs to professional institutions, government agencies and school groups, among others. Activities at the institute center around local and sustainable development programs, focusing on environmental studies, art and design. Following an introductory overview, attend a lecture about the Ga people, the traditional rulers of the Accra and coastal regions. Finally, experience the rhythms of the local culture at a special African drum and dance performance.

Cultural workshop

During your cultural workshop at the Kokrobitey Institute, share the vibrant cultural traditions of the Ghanaian people. Hands-on activities may include Batik fabric dyeing, papermaking or calabash carving, where you decorate a hollowed gourd with intricate Ghanaian designs. You may want to try your skills with the rhythms of African drumming or the movements of African dance, discover your Ghanaian moniker at a traditional naming ceremony or learn games from the local children. You'll also have the chance to participate in community service and create meaningful cross-cultural connections that shape the way you see the world.

Cape Coast

Travel on an excursion to the Cape Coast and tour Cape Coast Castle. Established as a fortification site in 1653, the castle held hundreds of slaves as they awaited transfer by boat to the Western Hemisphere. Learn about the history of the slave trade in a documentary film at the castle museum. Walk the grounds of Elmina Castle. Built by the Portuguese in 1482, Elmina Castle was the first trading post on the Gulf of Guinea, and later became an important stopping point for the Atlantic Slave Trade. Today, it serves as a popular and significant historical landmark. Both castles are recognized as UNESCO World Heritage Sites.
